Plagiarism

An essay must be your own work and largely written in your own words. Plagiarism comes from the Latin plagiarus/kidnapper. Plagiarism is considered serious academic misconduct. No part of the work may be copied in whole or part from another student's work, or from any other source (eg. published books, periodicals or internet) without due acknowledgement of the source.

DECLARATION

1. I hold a copy of this assignment, which I can produce if the original is lost or damaged.
2. I declare that no part of this assignment has been taken from any other student's assignment or from any other source except where due acknowledgement is made in the text, and that no part has been written for me by any other person.
3. I have not previously submitted nor am I currently submitting this work for any other course/unit.

I have read the Declaration and the statement on plagiarism and I understand that offenders may fail the unit/course in whole or in part.

Plagiarism

An essay must be your own work and largely written in your own words. Plagiarism comes from the Latin plagiarus/kidnapper. Plagiarism is considered serious academic misconduct. No part of the work may be copied in whole or part from another student's work, or from any other source (e.g., published books, periodicals or internet) without due acknowledgement of the source.

A student who is found to have sought to gain an unfair advantage by submitting for assessment a piece of written work which either in whole or in part makes unacknowledged use of, or reference to, the work of others, including Internet sources or by taking into an examination room unauthorised material, or by copying the work of another candidate in an examination, shall be liable to:

- failure of the unit for which the written work or examination was undertaken, or
- the loss of all marks for the written work or examination, or
- suspension of candidature for the degree.
